- Physical access to facilities.
- Reasonable modifications.
- Language access services.
- Disaster assistance, response, and recovery efforts.

Know Your Rights

Based on an individual's race, color, religion, nationality, sex, age, disability, English proficiency, or economic status:

FEMA cannot:

- Deny equal access to programs, activities, or services.
- Provide a program in a manner not equal, separate, or different from the way the program is provided to others.

FEMA will provide, when required:

- Information in large print, or electronic formats usable with screen readers.
- Sign Language Interpreters
- Written information translated into languages other than English.
- Spoken Language Interpreters.

Next Steps:

When an informal complaint is received from a disaster survivor or member of the public, FEMA OCR will work with the FEMA program office, directorate, or recipient to resolve the informal complaint. If resolution is not achieved, the complainant is provided with notice of the right to file a formal complaint. In most cases, if it is determined that FEMA OCR has jurisdiction over the formal complaint, then a full investigation will be completed.
